Women is a 1978 novel written by Charles Bukowski, starring his semi-autobiographical character Henry Chinaski. In contrast to Factotum, Post Office and Ham on Rye, Women is centered on Chinaski's later life, as a celebrated poet and writer, not as a dead-end lowlife. It does, however, feature the same constant carousel of women with whom Chinaski only finds temporary fulfillment.

The Los Angeles poet and author, Charles Bukowski wrote extensively about his relationships with women, love and sex during his lifetime, both in his poems and in his fiction. Despite accusations of misogyny and a late start to his romantic life, Bukowski had many partners and lovers, especially in late middle age. Later, many of his girlfriends discovered that they had been featured and often portrayed less than favorably in Bukowski's novel entitled, "Women".

Charles Bukowski knew the inconvenient truths now discussed in the manosphere. Known for his gritty realism, Charles Bukowski told the truth about women before telling the truth about them was cool. An excellent illustration of his grasp on the behavior of women came in this famous video clip of an argument he had with a whorish Anglo bitch he was dating and then later married.

~~Bukowski on Women — The New Modern Man~~

Critics have described Charles Bukowski as fulfilling a certain male fantasy of the anti-social slob, a man who can behave as he wishes, uninhibited by the general constraints of society. It was an image that he often played up to in public, affecting a boorish, W.C. Fields type of persona for his later poetry readings.
